

Will College Credit Now credits transfer to a University?

College Credit Now courses can transfer to universities just like any other college course. Students are encouraged to contact interested universities to confirm what CCN courses will be accepted for transfer credit and how applied.

Is College Credit Now different than AP?

The cost of College Credit Now through Chemeketa Community College is currently at $30 per year, per student, for unlimited qualifying CCN courses for each academic year. Fees for College Credit Now courses through other partnerships vary. The CCN credit is based on classroom learning outcomes (activities and tests). Any students scheduled in an approved CCN course may receive college credit for that course as long as required coursework is satisfactorily completed and students receive a course grade of C- or above. Advanced Placement (AP) fees are approximately $60 per exam for each class. The AP credits are based on a grade students receive on the national exam for the course(s). Students must receive a 3 – 5 on the AP exam in order to receive college credit and colleges/universities determine how those credits will be applied.

How do students receive CCN credit and when do they register?

Registration for approved CCN courses takes place internally ONLY at designated timelines, Winter Term, Semester 1 (December/January) and Spring Term, Semester 2 (March/April). Students meeting the necessary requirements within the designated course are eligible to register. Students become a community college student with a college transcript and are able to check the college's website for their CCN courses/grades.

How do students find their grades at the college?

Students can check their grades online at the appropriate college website. Note: Students will need to remember their college ID number, username and password. The college notifies the students of their ID number and username.

Do students have to take a placement test?

Students may have to take placement tests dependent on the course.

Should students register for CCN if they don't plan on attending a community college?

Students should absolutely take advantage of CCN while they are in high school. Even if they don't consider community college as an option after high school, they can transfer credits to another college, possibly attain higher rankings in the armed forces, use it on their resumes for employers, etc. It's a great, very affordable investment.

CCN Courses for the current school year:

McMinnville High School works closely with local community colleges to get the CCN classes approved each year. The community colleges have final approval of each CCN course which could change the list of CCN classes each year.

Future Courses:

McMinnville High School is continually pursuing post-high school opportunities around dual credit. More classes could be approved throughout the school year in both core content and career pathway courses.
